Temper Proof SMS

The message generated from External Short Messaging Entity (ESME) or a mobile phone is in plain text which can be easily read and modified before it reaches SMSC. Any wrong information received by the recipient can prove fatal for the user. To exploit the popularity of SMS in authentication & banking, it is necessary to provide the proper security to SMS so that it could reach to the receiver's mobile safely to provide data confidentiality, integrity, authentication, and non-repudiation. However, such requirements are not provided by the traditional SMS messaging providers. It is very necessary to secure the SMS by encryption, cypher & blockchain techniques and prevent it from the various attacks applied on SMS like man-in-middle attack, replay attack, non-repudiation etc so that it could provide the data security like confidentiality, authentication, integrity and non-repudiation.
